

Physician Boils Tools in Bucket Over Campfire

RICHFIELD—Assisting at the birth of an Indian papoose, which occurred in the open amid the noise and clatter of the tribe's camp a mile north of here, is the novel experience of Dr. T. R. Gledhill of Richfield.

The papoose—a ten-pound boy—seemed none the worse for his unceremonious entrance into the world. To the Indians the unusual spectacle of a doctor in white apron sterilizing his instruments in a tin bucket over a campfire was something to be marveled at.

The arrival of a man child in the tribe called for a demonstration of great joy among the red men.
